In a magnetic disk drive, a hard disk is rotated at a high speed, and information is written to and read from a recording surface of the hard disk by an actuator supported by a suspension arm. The suspension arm is moved by a swing movement of a voice coil motor in a radial direction of the hard disk, whereby the actuator is moved in a radial direction of the hard disk. The voice coil motor and the actuator are accommodated in a housing. In a process of manufacturing a hard disk drive, it is necessary to perform assembling, an outer ring press fit process, a swaging process, and a finishing process. In order to enhance a processing precision and a processing speed, a high-precision robot that can move along a line of sight is used in the processes. In the past, the outer ring press fit process,
