This results in a global magnitude of the CO2 drawdown from 1.8 and 2.8 gigatons, respectively, to 1.4 and 2.2 gigatons. This has a relatively large global impact in terms of climate mitigation. While the global magnitude of the oceanic degassing is relatively small compared to that of atmospheric CO2 drawdown from fossil fuels and land use change, it is huge relative to anthropogenic emissions. The total amount of carbon stored in the ocean by this process is estimated to be in the range of 1.2 to 1.5 gigatons. It appears that oceanic carbon dioxide gas storage could be a potentially effective solution to global warming. The oceanic carbon dioxide gas will also seep into the continental crust, exerting the effect of carbon dioxide rock weathering, as shown in the figure below. This is an important source of carbon to the atmospheric CO₂ drawdown. The global range for the amount of carbon stored in the oceans by this process is estimated to be in the range of 1.2 to 1.5 gigatons of carbon. The proposal of oceanic carbon dioxide gas storage by oceanic carbonate dissolution in the continental crust would have large implications in terms 595f342e71
