Enjoy the game!6:00 AM Last week, I had my agency start looking for an apartment in DC. We got in contact with a few units, and they help us find a good one in Adams Morgan. It looks like it could fit our needs, and its in a good location, several shops within walking distance. Only it is looking pretty expensive, both for the monthly payments (couple of grand) and the renovation cost (same amount). That said, we are looking for a better deal, so we are trying to find a sub-$1k per month apartment. We are also looking into renting out our place while doing our work on a bigger place. Regardless of these plans, I always look at how close the place is to Metro. This is because I hate long commutes, and would be happy to do it if its not too far away. I also hate that they will ask for 100% of my first month's rent, even if they are just using it as a temporary space while I work out the move. They will ask for at least 200 of the first month's rent (60th of the month). So how much is 100? Subtract 100% of the (monthly) rent? It is at least 50, much less than 100. So when you do the rent + move-in fees alone, it is already 60 of the rent.
