While some may view this technology as a feature, we want to know what the game play community wants and how they want to use it. That's why we will begin working in the coming months with several regions to test "HyperMotion Technology" in the latest FIFA game. During this time, we will also invite players to participate in a real-life, full-intensity demo of the game. The game will be available during FIFA's next franchise partner launch event in June 2017. After our research and play tests, we may look into additional features, gameplay modes, or make other changes based on your feedback. To keep up to date on our progress, look for us on our social channels (@EASPORTSFIFA) as the year goes on. Please keep in mind that this is a small subset of player feedback. What you think of the game may not be representative of the rest of your regions. We are using these real-life play tests to gather data on our new gameplay experiences and features and determine how they should be applied to FIFA.
