Sep 12, 2011 - Excerpt: Shams al-Ma'arif, the Ma'arif of the Prophet. Later, he composed a manual of prophetic medicine entitled. MicroRNA in hematologic malignancies: emerging roles. MicroRNAs (miRNAs) are small noncoding RNAs that function in post-transcriptional gene regulation. Altered expression of miRNAs has been demonstrated in many types of human cancer. These small noncoding RNAs function as either oncogenes or tumor suppressors and influence tumorigenesis through the regulation of a variety of cellular processes including proliferation, differentiation, invasion, and apoptosis. A growing body of evidence suggests that miRNAs may play a key role in the development of hematologic malignancies, including leukemia, lymphoma, and myeloma. Specifically, miRNAs influence the development, differentiation, growth, and progression of hematologic malignancies by altering the expression of various cellular proteins. In this review, we will summarize the biological functions and clinical implications of miRNAs in hematologic malignancies and their potential as novel diagnostic and therapeutic strategies.
