What's new in TideTurn:

 rallies around the world that are held in honor of the AZH-300. Origins of the AZH-300... Why the AZH-300 and TideTurn? Global AZH-300 Turntable Project Total Immersion Beginnings of the AZH-300... The first AZH-300 appeared on autumn 1968, where it was built by an unknown company. The prototype was powered by a De Weaver Company turntable, a TaM Radio 45*45 table. Later on, this unit was modified with a Pendleton record cartridge (Westland Empire). Shortly after, the original Tenco□s Armstrong/Sturdi 24*48 table moved into the spotlight. This lighter table could be connected by a set of cables to the AZH-300. Thanks to their new talents, Luis García and his team made a new version of the AZH-300 - AZH400 and later on a 3-way version by changing the drums or replacing the rod for more resistance. The All-purpose version of the AZH-400 This was the first one to reach the U.S. It was built in 1970. Its basic design is very well done. a seven inch bearing flexible belt drive, suspension with two rods: one for counterweight and one for moment caused by the speed of rotation of the turntable. The mat in this version was the Snir 3 system. An unique feature was its noise protection, which was done by covering the entire frame in metal mesh." (JJIndus) Main Features The turntable has two groove systems. (1) A conventional epicyclic belt system and (2) A modified worm wheel and roller (just like the Lord Stirling version). This is the strongest worm-wheel system in the world. This principal was used even by a few European manufacturers. This was one of the original AZH-300's later life It has a central counter-weight, which manages the entire movement. A switching LED circuit allows to obtain different operating modes: Storing, Grand Power, Neutral. Manufacturer's debut in 1968 with the AZH-300 bearing Tenco⎕s Armstrong/Sturdi system The first AZH-300 prototype of 1968 used a de Weaver cartridge with a rpm of 45rpm Armstrong was a recent invention from the De Weaver company that
