Perfect World Entertainment, the outfit that's publishing the latest Chinese MMO Age of Wushu, is somewhat better known for developing games like Monster Hunter and Diablo, but CEO Steven Zhong brings some big ideas for making an MMO fun in 2010. Mr. Zhong joined us at GDC Europe 2010, and gave us a great look behind the curtains of industry. Here are a few excerpts, check out the whole video after the jump. "There are going to be 10 million players to Age of Wushu in Korea and 200 million in China." "If you see the GFC as a hurricane, a tsunami coming into China, and the SFC as the rain, the tidal wave, the normal reaction is to fight back the tide. We want the Chinese to fight back." "Ten million players on the game in Korea equals to five hundred million in China... It's not a challenge for my company to meet the challenge." "To make Age of Wushu completely free-to-play like many other free-to-play games in Europe and the U.S. is not the purpose at all. We want this to be a fully-fledged, full-scale MMO, just like World of Warcraft. It is going to be totally free-to-play. It's just the business." "The whole idea is to have the most [number of] subscribers [as possible]... [After] the SFC, the next is the GFC in China. We have a risk that there will be a weak point where people really don't care at all. So the market risk is really a big issue." I think that's enough. Q: Why is my mysqli connection failing when my socket connection is working? I'm trying to verify my website's security by trying to hack it. In the process I'm trying to verify that the database connection is not a trivial one. I'm using a multi-threaded set of php, mysql, and cgi scripts. My actual script is long and I figured that it would be easier to setup a proof of concept, like a pair of php scripts that each attempt to load the same data from the database. In an attempt to prove that my database login is not trivial, I'm trying to force the script to not even load the data and instead have the script echo an "oops no data". This was the first script, named 'test.php': Here is the next script named 'readmore.php': When I go to test.php I'm seeing that the code works fine when my socket connection is working to my database server. When I put in my server's ip address instead of localhost, however, I am getting no data echoed. When I verify the connection to the server with ping, it is successfully returned. After a bit of playing around, it has become clear that it is this mysqli_connect in the second script that seems to be failing. The first script works with no issues, the second script behaves as expected. I'm aware that socket connections can be slower than mysqli connections
