In the 1950s, Fluffy was part of a ménage a quatre, or foursome, with his father, mother, and sister. While the entire family was living together, Fluffy was in charge of all their bills and finances. Because of his talents, one of his father's brothers allowed him to "put his head in the basket" and become an acrobat for the circus. Fluffy quickly became the star of the circus and was loved by audiences the world over. In the 1970s, Fluffy became the star of the sitcom "Fluffy's Feet", helping out his family and friends, running errands, and even going to school. While his family was busy with their other jobs, Fluffy would take care of the "real" ones. In the 1980s, Fluffy began starring in a different sitcom, one that would change his life forever. The Ultimate, Best, and Pro version of KeyShot runs on both Windows® and .Q: How should I create objects in an initializer in C++? Currently, I have a problem with initializing objects in C++. My program takes in a bunch of information from text files, and then I want to output the information to a.txt file. I want to use a function to do the initializing so it can be reused throughout my program. It's a small program that just takes in and outputs five different parameters and calculates the average. My code is as follows: #include #include #include #include #include

#include #include using namespace std; void
readFile(ifstream &inFile, ofstream &outFile) { string filename; string line; int score, highest, secondHighest;
double average; double avgHigh, avgLow; getline(inFile, filename); getline(inFile, line); ifstream fin;
fin.open(filename.c_str(), ios::in); fin>>score; fin>>highest;
fin>>secondHighest; fin>>avgHigh; fin>>avgLow;
fin.close(); // calculate the average average = (score + highest + secondHighest) / 3.0; ofstream out;
out.open("student_pairs.txt"); // write the data to the file out
