tried the machine on his first two bags - went well... but then I think two of the fifth bag buckles came unstuck so it was very difficult... I could only get one of the buckles out and I am hoping it is not in too much of a wreck as I already have a problem belt to replace... hoping for the best.... I've been using the machine on my third set of bags - the ones that you are knitting the lengths from your UFO's. (1) Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a binocular apparatus equipped with a distance measuring instrument and suitable for nighttime observation and a distance measuring method using the binocular apparatus. (2) Description of the Related Art When the observation of a target is performed at night, it is normal practice that the target is observed with a combination of a binocular apparatus equipped with a distance measuring instrument and an optical system such as a so-called riflescope for the binocular apparatus. For example, Japanese Patent Application Publication No. H02-273902 discloses a binocular apparatus equipped with a distance measuring instrument having an infrared sensor. In such a binocular apparatus, the pupil distance of an observer cannot be directly measured, but the distance between a target and the observer is estimated based on the distance between an image formed on the image plane of a riflescope and the retina pupil of the observer. Accordingly, the distance of the target from the observer is set to a greater value than the actual distance of the target from the observer in order that the target can be observed through a binocular apparatus. The distance between the image formed on the image plane of the riflescope and the retina pupil of the observer is set to a distance corresponding to a maximum observation magnification of the binocular apparatus. This distance will be referred to as an assumed value of the distance. When the binocular apparatus is used for night observation, it is preferable that the assumed value of the distance is set as close to a real distance as possible. This is because if the assumed value of among women in urban Bangladesh. Some studies have shown a higher risk among females. However, accurate data on causes of death is not available for women in rural Bangladesh. The major risk factors for diabetes mellitus and cardiovascular disease included increasing age, elevated systolic blood pressure, obesity, physical inactivity, lack of fruit and vegetable consumption, smoking, alcohol consumption, certain types of dietary factors, and low socioeconomic status ([@R7]-[@R13]). Because of these risks, it is important to make a health intervention policy that prevent or delay the onset of type 2 diabetes mellitus and cardiovascular diseases to reduce the heavy disease burden. The potential risk factors in this study population should be considered when planning a community-based intervention program for type 2 diabetes mellitus and cardiovascular diseases in urban Bangladesh. Primary healthcare workers in urban Bangladesh can develop well-designed community-based interventions to improve the lifestyle and reduce the risk factors for diabetes and cardiovascular diseases. The success of intervention programs depends on active participation of the community. Therefore, the rate of participation in the various activities such as community-based interventions, health programs, education, and research should be high. Therefore, future health promotion programs should consider using community approach strategies. This will strengthen the
