The ripple effect of the war in Syria has now spilled over to Libya where the UN has proclaimed a state of emergency and imposed a no-fly zone on Tripoli, the capital. Radiating out from there, the tensions and violence that had been building up are now spilling across the Mediterranean. The operation marks the first time that Russia has sent its warplanes into a conflict outside the Black Sea and the Baltic States. The operation is reportedly taking place in "Syria's border area with Iraq and Jordan" to "decisively repulse the terrorists' advances and provide security to the city of Raqqa." But the operation is far from easy. According to a special correspondent for Russia Today, not only is the Russian Air Force often outnumbered on the ground, but they're not even sure where the insurgents are coming from.
