Field of the Invention The present invention is directed to the field of providing assistance to the driver of a vehicle. The invention is directed to the field of providing voice-activated or voice-directed assistance to the driver of a vehicle. The invention is directed to the field of monitoring the driver of a vehicle, and providing the driver with voice-directed, vehicle-based assistance in response to detecting the driver is falling asleep while driving asleep while driving has existed for thousands of years and continues to pose a significant problem in the driving community. As one example of the problem, driving while tired can be viewed in various ways. For example, driving while tired can result in a tired driver exhibiting lack of attentiveness, driving with eyes closed, mouth open, snoring, facial features that are twisted and distorted, and jerky movements and hand/foot movements. These physical manifestations may cause other drivers on the road and pedestrians nearby to become concerned about the ability of the driver to operate the vehicle safely. The problem of falling asleep while driving exists across multiple industries and jobs. Employers and workers in many occupations have an interest in providing some means to monitor the performance of their employees and ensure that they have fallen asleep while driving and unmber of studies have been conducted to find ways to prevent such occurrences in the future. For example, drivers have
