The podcast had some good information, but the audio was so bad that you couldn't make out. Cable television customers in Fairbanks and Cook Inlet could get some relief from a new study that ranks the cities with the most reliable television signals. The study gives the city with the best signal, and also honors the towns with the second and third-best television signals. The study comes from ClearVue, an Ann Arbor, Michigan-based company that specializes in television signal mapping, says ClearVue spokeswoman Jen Chow. The survey is based on the signal strength of over 45,000 television signals, Chow said. The cable companies serving in Cook Inlet and Fairbanks ranked 11th and 14th respectively on this year's list. ClearVue's last TV Signal Report also placed Fairbanks' cable television service as the 14th worst in the country, but Chow says that the ClearVue rankings more accurately and comprehensively reflects the state of Fairbanks' cable television signal. In Fairbanks, "Fairbanks Microwave and Copper Cable" tops the list. Fairbanks Microwave is owned by Union MiniWorks. Union MiniWorks also owns a cable television company in Fairbanks, Copper Cable TV. In Cook Inlet, Signal Cable is ranked first, while multiple cable providers are vying for the second ranking, Chow says. In the report, published at www.cleavue.com, Chow says, "People can easily understand the community based ranking by each local cable provider." Those interested in receiving the report, which includes data on cable providers, signal quality, and more, can access the study at www.cleavue.com.
