The Last word Gaelic TV has been showing an additional movie every week since late March - but there is still no sign of the two-part epic "Kingdom of Kerry" to be shown. The broadcaster is yet to confirm when the programme will return to its schedule. It follows the broadcaster's plan to try and maximise the reach of the movie, which includes airing in rotation with an episode of its popular comedy show "River Cafe" every Tuesday night for the week of June 4. The movie deals with the historical background to the Troubles. It was initially shown on late night TV after the news, on Fridays and Saturdays, attracting a good response at the box office. This was complemented by bookings at cinemas. However, national press coverage has not been robust, much to the annoyance of Mac Carty, the TV3 director of broadcast who was involved in the original editing of the movie. There was also a snub from the IFTA, who last week refused to rate the release for quality. However, the main fault appears to be from broadcaster. Last year, when "Monkbar" was screened after the news, it also attracted good reviews. The initial airing was in December and lasted until February, according to the Digital Journal. However, the second half did not appear in the RTÉ schedule. A source close to the TV3 creative team said, "It's very frustrating for Mac Carty as, in the past two years, we had done two Fergusons, two Monks, and two Le Chemin de la Croisiere. "It was doing well at the box office and then at the end of the year, it was supposed to be back on air. However, it fell off the radar again. "It was supposed to be shown on June 4 and we were told that it would be shown weekly for 6d1f23a050
