Leukotriene (LT) biosynthesis from neutrophils was inhibited by four isomers of ent-kaur-16-en-19-oic acid isolated from the leaves of Entada phaseoloides and Isolindula floribunda, respectively, in a concentration dependent manner. All the isomers inhibited LT-C4 (LTC4) generation in a cell free LTA4-stimulated system. In addition to the potent inhibition of leukotriene synthesis, all the isomers exhibited significant inhibitory activity toward 5-lipoxygenase. In a cell-free assay, the isomers inhibited formation of 5(S)-, 8(S)-, 12(S)-, 15(S)- and 16(R)-HETE from the arachidonic acid.Mucinous cystic neoplasms of the pancreas: MR findings. The purpose of this report is to describe the magnetic resonance (MR) findings in mucinous cystic neoplasms of the pancreas (MCNs) on the basis of our experience with four MR examinations in three patients. MCNs can be classified according to the number of mucin pools as unilocular (USCN) and multilocular (MSCN) on MR images. All lesions appeared on MR images as either well-defined, T2 low intensity masses or cystic masses. USCN showed a homogeneous low-intensity signal and MSCN showed a heterogeneous and high intensity on T2-weighted images. Before surgical resection, all lesions showed a low intensity on fat-suppressed T1-weighted images with or without a distinct mucin pool. On fat-suppressed T1-weighted
