"The deer took off in front of me, and I slammed on my brakes," DeMuth said. DeMuth said the deer, a doe with a fawn, sped across two lanes of traffic, into an adjacent alley and into a parking lot before running over a small cinder block wall and into the forest. DeMuth said she watched the deer run into the woods before she pulled her car forward to ensure there was no traffic, then she drove home. DeMuth lives on Kedzie. "We were literally in a tunnel of deer," DeMuth said. "It was like bumper cars. One would go in and the next would go in. The next would hit him and this one would hit him." DeMuth said she called the police and was told it was not their problem. Chicago police later contacted her, she said, and asked her not to publicly identify the doe's owners, but she has spoken with some online commenters who said they were the owners. The assistant manager of Denver-based Wildlife Ecologist Services said when the group started out in 1988, there was no such thing as a deer rescue, and there wasn't a specific title for someone who would rescue a deer. This sort of thing seems to happen every year, but the agency really didn't see it. But then it got awful. The herd totaled well over 100 deer that spilled out from the road into the suburbs. Dozens of deer are being quarantined at the Wildlands Conservancy in Elk Grove Village following
