In the course of a world of opportunities and dangers, the puzzle of maná€™s future remains of eternal fascination. When will we reach the stars? Will mankind ever defeat death? The answers to these questions remain elusive because we have not looked hard enough at our own hearts and souls. On the surface, life looks simple, but within each of us exist infinite complexities. We are a unique blend of good and evil. The following is an excerpt from a speech given by Vice President Dan Quayle at the What Is Marriage Conference for Episcopalians on May 6,Á . They believe that if people are happy at work, they'll do a better job (or at least strive to do one). It's not the economic argument that makes sense to them. It's the personal one, and it's not about money at all. The logical conclusion? Your company, while it may be profitable, is just as likely to be in trouble as most businesses. The people who run it may be reliable and kind, but they're not the ones who will get it done. It may have been a difficult decision for the chiefs. And the decisions that they make may seem like an anathema to a company's bottom line, but the people they keep are often a lot more important than the ones who are let go. Human capital, the belief that a company's workers are its most valuable asset, is what's important here. It's that human capital — the workforce as a whole — that's the key to a company's survival. What's more, it's not only the executives who are being educated. It's the rest of the employees. Everyone at a company has a stake 6d1f23a050
