The jury is still out on whether the motivation for the Aurora shooting in July 2012 was in fact a protest against the killing of Trayvon Martin or whether it was a murder/suicide attempt. (The final report in the case is due out on December 15.) Whatever the motive, it's clear that the shooter, James Holmes, has been a longstanding member of the violent neo-Nazi movement. He had been studying at the University of Colorado-Boulder for three years, beginning in 2008, and was originally enrolled in a neuroscience PhD program at the university before dropping out (post-suicide) and re-enrolling in 2012 with the intention of receiving his degree. He has described himself as "an anti-government, anarchist and atheist who idolizes Ayn Rand." He also had long-standing ties to the "al-Farabda" (dawn) student group, a pro-jihad, anti-Israel group on the CU-Boulder campus. Nico Perrilloux, editor of Uncategorized Security Blog, has been following the events closely and has updated his blog about the case. (Another interesting fact is that he tried to buy an automatic gun shortly before the attack, despite a federal ban on the sale of automatic
