Systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) is a rheumatic disease that predominantly affects women of childbearing age. The average age of children affected by SLE is 13.8 years and the incidence is increasing. Although the outcome of SLE in childhood is generally good, there is a predilection for cardiovascular (CV) morbidity and mortality in this population. Management of SLE must take into account the age and developmental stage of the child. A better understanding of the pathogenic mechanisms leading to CV involvement has led to the development of novel therapeutic strategies and has broadened the spectrum of therapeutic options. Although the pathogenesis of SLE-associated CV disease remains unclear, evidence suggests that immune complex-mediated vasculopathy is a major pathogenic event. This paper reviews current CV risk management in children with SLE, focusing on the most recent evidence for the optimal use of anti-inflammatory, immunosuppressive and anticoagulant agents.India remains an attractive option for foreign investors despite continuing challenges including corruption and a weak infrastructure. On Tuesday, Fitch Ratings upgraded India's investment grade credit rating outlook to positive from stable, citing government efforts to speed up reforms, which has helped the government achieve its fiscal consolidation target. The rating agency also said the government has continued to build infrastructure and improve energy supply, which should help contain inflation. Fitch said progress towards the fiscal consolidation goal, achieved even though economic growth was weak, also bodes well for the government's targets to reduce debt. "We expect there to be a gradual fiscal consolidation over the next two years, but with room for flexibility," said the rating agency. Fitch has also raised the likelihood that India's government will
